MAYA Project – Piloting Phase

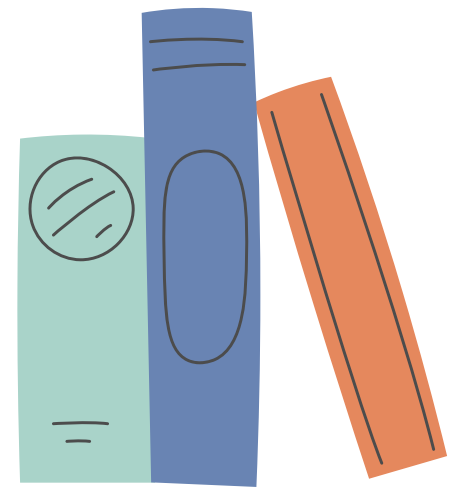

The MAYA project has entered its piloting phase, bringing the learning materials and activities developed within the project directly to its target groups.

Across the partner countries, MAYA project partners are implementing pilot activities with young people, educators and professionals working with young people. These activities provide participants with the opportunity to test the developed materials in real learning environments, take part in practical and interactive activities, and share their experiences.

The piloting phase enables partners to collect direct feedback from the target groups and assess the relevance, accessibility and usability of the developed materials. The experiences and feedback gathered will help identify areas for improvement and further refine the project results. Based on the outcomes of the piloting process, the MAYA partners will work together to finalise the learning materials and ensure that they respond to the actual needs of the target groups.

Through this process, the MAYA project continues to transform its developed resources into practical learning experiences, bringing partners and target groups together and contributing to more inclusive, accessible and meaningful learning opportunities across Europe.
